

The Life You Did Not Ask For

Random thoughts part something, maybe 1

---

By Paul Mothapo

2026

Every day, every hour, every second _ all the way down to a tiny millisecond _ you are stepping into a world of endless possibilities, good or bad.

A world that comes with possibilities you are prepared for, and those you are not. The sick wonder if each breath will be their last. The unemployed wonder if the next call, email, message, or text will be the one that changes their situation.

A world so unpredictable that those who think they know it best can perish without ever truly knowing who they were. There is no manual for how to live in it. And every now and then, even the behavioral patterns we rely on become obsolete.

Nobody is coming to save you. The world does not owe you a warning before it changes everything. It does not care how hard you worked, how carefully you planned, or how much you deserve better. It moves, and you either move with it or you get left behind holding a life that no longer fits.

Most people are one phone call away from a completely different existence. One result. One decision made by someone else in a room you were never invited into. The comfortable life you are living right now is not yours permanently. It is on loan. And the terms can change without notice.

The ones who did not make it were not weaker than you. They were not less deserving. They were simply standing in the wrong place when the world shifted. And the honest truth is that you do not always get to choose where you are standing. You just get to choose what you do next.

...My thoughts ran out from here, and wait for maybe part 2 : )

About the Author

Paul Mothapo

Paul Mothapo is a human, just like you. Nothing more to say and nothing less to say.